

ABOUT

Nancy And Beth, the self-described punk vaudeville band led by Megan Mullally and Stephanie Hunt, are proud to share the new album art and first video for their self-titled debut album, out April 7. Check out the music video for their first single "Please, Mr. Jailer" here (directed by Mullally).

As for the album cover, "We wanted to present ourselves as simply two humans on the planet," said Mullally. "Stephanie and I have such a simpatico, a real affinity for each other. We like a lot of the same things and of course have similar tastes in music. We have that weird 'psychic connection' that doesn't come around too often. As a performing duo, it's fantastic." Every song is sung in tight harmony and fully choreographed (by Mullally). "It's pretty tongue-in-cheek, we don't take ourselves too seriously. It's not a scripted show, it's a band, so it's different from one show to the next. It's wry and celebratory at the same time."

April 7, 2017 marks the release of their self-titled debut album, produced by Megan Mullally, Andrew Pressman and Bill Mims, and featuring Megan, Stephanie Hunt, Datri Bean, Petra Haden Joe Berardi, Andrew Pressman and Anthony da Costa.
